Damian Grey is the owner of FilmStory, a video production company focused on raising purpose-driven team-minded content creators that can create purposeful and solution-minded video content through story. With this being his 10th year in business, he's had the opportunity to film in projects around the country focusing on corporate, weddings, and real-estate related projects. Damian is married to Sloane Grey and considers his business a failure if he is not growing and building a strong foundation of faith at home with his wife. He aspires to be a business leader who helps other content creators grow in their ability to serve & cultivate communities.

Sloane Grey is married to Damian Grey and from Atlanta, GA. She is currently in her first year as a dual degree student at the University of Virginia's Darden Business School (top 10 business school in the US) and School of Education. Sloane is a Consortium and Forté full-scholarship recipient.

After completing her undergraduate degree in mathematics at Valdosta State University in South Georgia, Sloane spent the last nine years developing educational & tutoring programs for students and foster-care organizations through a start-up education company, Enay Coaching (Eeenay).

Her desire to help students led her to pursue a post-graduate education with a goal to combine helping young adults navigate career paths and her personal hair journey into a company. In the meantime Sloane is pursuing a brand-management role at Procter & Gamble, where she'll be interning in the oral care division over the summer.

Sloane's main goal in life is to know and serve the Lord in all she does.
